Shuttle launch delayed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA postponed the launch of space shuttle Columbia for at least a week because of worrisome heat damage to insulation on a booster rocket used on an earlier flight.

Columbia was supposed to blast off Friday on a 16-day science mission, but NASA on Monday delayed the flight until at least Nov. 15.

Engineers are puzzled by an unusual amount of damage to nozzle insulation in one of the two solid-fuel booster rockets used to launch Atlantis in September.

NASA said the Atlantis crew was in no danger, but engineers want to understand what happened before flying Columbia.

A leak of hot gas through a joint in a booster rocket caused Challenger to explode after liftoff in 1986. NASA has since been extremely cautious about any booster abnormalities.

The five astronauts assigned to the Columbia mission will release and retrieve two satellites and conduct two spacewalks to practice space station construction.

The crew includes Story Musgrave, who at 61 will be the oldest person ever in space.

Passenger has heart attack, plane lands

COLUMBUS — A charter plane with a heart attack victim aboard was diverted to land today at Port Columbus International Airport.

The Boeing 747 Tower Air plane landed about 10 a.m., and the stricken passenger was taken by ambulance to a hospital, said a man who answered the telephone in the tower. The man would not give his name.

No other details were immediately available.

Church fire deemed suspicious

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio — A fire authorities said appeared to be suspicious destroyed a church Monday.

The fire at the Missionary Church, just south of the city, was reported by a 911 call at about 11 a.m., said Sgt. Roger Roberts of the Clark County sheriff's office.

No one was in the church at the time, and there were no reports of any injuries.

Roberts said the wooden church and its contents were a total loss.

Cause of the fire was under investigation, said Roberts.

NY man sentenced

NEW YORK — A man with a history of mental problems who believed the television networks were out to get him was sentenced to 25 years in prison Monday for shooting an NBC stagehand.

William Tager, 49, of Charlotte, N.C., pleaded guilty in July to first-degree manslaughter and criminal use of a firearm in the death of Campbell Montgomery, who worked for the "Today" show. Tager must serve 12 1/2 years before he is eligible for parole.

Hiring methods depend on vote

Students could help hire faculty, if a resolution is passed today by the Faculty Senate.

The Faculty Senate will reconsider the procedures for recruiting faculty this afternoon, specifically to allow students and other non-faculty to be permitted on hiring panels.

The resolution was defeated in September, however two senators who voted on the prevailing side of the issue requested a re-vote, which allowed the resolution to be reconsidered. After the first vote, student representatives to the Senate have campaigned for a re-vote.

Janet Morrison, Graduate Student Senate president, said lack of attendance and confusion in voting were the main reasons the initial resolution failed.

"I think there was some confusion regarding the voting status," Morrison said. "I certainly hope it's going to pass now."

The Senate Executive Committee voted to change the wording of the original resolution to make the intent more clear.

The proposal states: "Academic units should seek student, staff or alumni input in the deliberations of their screening committees."

Morrison said many students wanted to participate as a voting member of the panel, but were concerned they would be denied any type of input in the process.

Hal Lunde, Faculty Senate chairman, explained there are a variety of aspects which senators will look at before voting on the resolution. He warned students to be advised on what the faculty will vote for and against.

"It's interesting how this works," Lunde said. "There are two opposing concepts and the faculty are held accountable."

Provost Charles Middleton said each department should have the option to include students when hiring faculty.

"I think if a department wishes to have it, and it makes sense, I don't have a problem with it," Middleton said. "For me, having student participation in the recruitment of the faculty in a variety of ways, ought to be the norm of the campus."

Middleton said a student, like any other committee member, should not be allowed to be the difference when it comes to the decision to hire.

"If it is evenly divided and a single student vote makes the difference, it doesn't make any difference where the student sits, because the student's not the issue," Middleton said. "The issue is it's divided. That's problematic, and when it's problematic you shouldn't hire."

Motorcyclist injured in Wooster St. crash

A motorcyclist was injured Monday afternoon as he struck the side of a car on Wooster Street.

The motorcyclist was traveling east on Wooster around 2:30 p.m., when his cycle struck a vehicle coming out of Troup Street.

"There was a car turning left onto Wooster, and the motorcycle hit the driver's side door," said Kristen Papenbrock, senior interpersonal communications major, who witnessed the accident.

Papenbrock said the biker had just begun traveling east on Wooster Street after the light had changed and did not appear to be moving very fast.

The car involved in the incident was not damaged heavily, according to Papenbrock, suffering only a dented door, with a "rubber strip" hanging out-of-kilter.

The motorcycle, a late-model Honda CBR, sustained moderate damage to the front, with several pieces of metal torn loose from the front wheel assembly.

One witness, who declined to be identified, said the motorcycle appeared to be traveling about 30 miles per hour.

Bowling Green Police Office Matthew Miles said the cyclist broke his wrist, and complained of pains in his stomach.

Campaigns draw to close

President Clinton appealed for a second term Monday by taking credit for a revived economy and promising that if given four more years, "we'll be better off still." Battling the odds on election eve, Bob Dole warned of mounting Clinton ethical questions and declared: "America deserves better."

Control of Congress was at stake, too, as Americans prepared to cast ballots in the last presidential election of the 1990s. Clinton had the upper hand in the race against Dole and Reform Party candidate Ross Perot, while Republicans were favored to keep their House and Senate majorities.

"I'm not optimistic on a national basis at all on the presidential race," said Florida Republican Chairman Tom Slade. "It truly would be a political miracle if Dole can pull this out."

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, on the other hand, voiced confidence he would not have to hand his gavel over to Democrats come January.

"I'm currently planning on what we'll do next year in the majority," Gingrich said as he campaigned back home in Georgia.

Still, strategists in both parties said dozens of races were too close to predict on the final Monday of a campaign that was, oddly, both a referendum on the incumbent Democratic president and the Republican Congress sent to Washington midway through Clinton's term.

"There are going to be a lot of close races and that's just a fact," said Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour.

Given that, the candidates were up early, or, in Dole's case, didn't bother sleeping at all.

"It's hard to believe, isn't it?" Clinton replied, at age 50 setting out confidently for the final day of what is likely to be his final campaign.

Later, in Cleveland, Clinton said the economy had created nearly 11 million jobs and the deficit had been cut by 60 percent since he took office. "We're

Get out to the polls

Today is November 5—Election day. And it's a big one, with the voters of the America determining who our next leader will be.

Almost the entire population of this University is eligible to vote, save those attending from countries other than the U.S. and those who have not yet turned 18. Therefore, there is no excuse for this University not having a large voter turnout.

In other words, get out there and vote! There are, believe it not, many other countries in the world that are fighting to get the same privilege that most of us have had — and abused — since the formation of our country(excluding women and non-white males).

However, even the above-mentioned groups now have the right to vote. Yet, members of those groups often represent the lowest percentage of voter turnout.

These groups also have the smallest percentage of government representation in office. Therefore, voting is one of their small (but important) voices in our government.

For those out there who believe that your vote doesn't count, that the politicians won't keep any of their promises, etc., etc., there is proof that says otherwise. For example, in the 1994 Sugarcreek Township (Ohio) trustee race, the fire chief chose to run against a long-standing (and much-maligned by certain members of the community) incumbent. The number of votes for each candidate came out equal. The winner was decided by a coin toss, which "ruled" in favor of the incumbent.

In other words, all of those who were "too busy" to vote, or thought that their single voice would not count, ended up being dead wrong. Instead of making a choice that could have indeed had a lasting impact on their community, their voice was not and will not be heard.

This is an example of how indifference can have far-reaching effects. Unfortunately, many have the mindset that Americans are lazy, uncaring and disinterested.

When citizens from other countries who do not enjoy having the right to vote see Americans simply ignoring this privilege, it only reinforces the mindset that Americans are lazy and apathetic. Let's not make this the American way. Please vote today.

Let's have a reality check, please

Meredith Southard

Buried under the assorted junk on my coffee table are some issues of Cosmopolitan. They surface whenever I have male visitors, who sniff them out like bloodhounds.

"Why is this magazine so full of beautiful half-naked women?" a friend asked as he flipped through one. "I'm not complaining, but isn't this a women's magazine? Do women really want to see this?"

"Heck, no," I said, "Not heterosexual women, at any rate. But that magazine is one big ad for beauty products—of course it will feature bunches of irritatingly beautiful women. They're hoping to bug us into buying their stuff so we can look like that, too, ha ha."

His question piqued my interest. What, exactly is it that we're all trying to look like? I apprehended the magazine from him. As expected, I encountered images of conventionally attractive women with nearly every page turn.

And they all look the same. Shift the facial features ever so slightly, change the hair or eyeliner and you have essentially the same woman. She's young, she's white, she's thin and she looks like nobody I ever see on the street. Is this who we all want to be?

An informal study of the Fall/Winter issue of Cosmo revealed some dismal statistics: of the 60 women who appeared, 52 were white, 59 were "young" (seeming under 40) and all were thin.

The men did not fare much better. Of the 12 I found, 10 were white, 10 were young and 10 were thin and muscled.

These statistics are not limited to women's magazines alone. They hold consistent across most of the mainstream media. It presents quite a homogenized view of America.

Why is this ideal dangled before us like a carrot on a string? Is it a plot by certain industries to keep us feeling inadequate so we will buy their products? Possibly. Whatever it is, it has made us into a nation of neurotic, dieting, make-up buying, plastic-surgery-receiving basket cases.

It's rather ironic, for example, that in a world where 60 million people starve to death annually, Americans have made dieting into a billion dollar a year industry. About one-in-five college women have an eating disorder. Eighty percent of fourth graders in a California school district were on a diet. Forty-three percent of women who responded to a magazine survey said they'd rather die, literally, than be fat.

Statistics are just statistics, though. They don't tell how the mother of a friend of mine was denied a job as a customer service rep at an airline because she exceeded a certain weight. The limit for her height, 5 feet 6 inches, is 139 pounds. She weighs 142, the national average for women of her height.

They don't tell of the 11-year-old Ft. Lauderdale boy who committed suicide in August. He hung himself from a tree, too afraid to go back to school where his classmates teased him relentlessly because he was overweight.

Can something as seemingly innocent as a beauty ideal be responsible? Absolutely.

It can also be partially blamed for the perpetuation of racism, that old monster. When I was growing up, "Sesame Street" and "Fat Albert" were my only media connections to people of other racial and ethnic groups. Things have improved since then, but not enough. People of color still appear alone, in most mainstream media, in a sea of white people. And chillingly reminiscent of Nazi Germany is the way a white person is presented as the ideal. Even if a person of color is lauded as beautiful, his or her skin is often light, their features somewhat Caucasian.

Other groups that are underrepresented are the elderly and the physically and mentally challenged. I have never seen an ad featuring a physically or mentally challenged person, unless it was for a special interest group.

By excluding all of these groups of people from the beauty ideal, we are teaching mainstream America to continue to view them as "the other," not "normal." And we are even further alienating these groups from the mainstream, leaving them at quite a disadvantage.

So everyone wants to be beautiful. There's nothing wrong with that. But when the limits of "beautiful" are so narrow that there are about a dozen people in America who truly are, we have a problem.

Let's expand the definition of beautiful. Hey, Cosmo: Show me men and women who aren't thin but who are still in good health and happy. Show me a guy with Down's Syndrome. Show me some older folk. Show me people of all colors. Show me something real.

Letters

For once you are reading a letter that is not a drawn out complaining about the University. Sure, I could rant about how bad the BGSU parking is (if we are the "customer" for BGSU then why do we have the worst parking spaces ... ever go to a retail establishment where the employees get the prime parking spot?) or I could moan about the fact that construction on campus is a pain in the neck or whine about not having a computer lab open 24/7 (they say we do, but really ...) or grumble about the safety or lights or whatever. I won't. I do, however, have a much more important and heartfelt complaint concerning Bowling Green, the city itself.

Halloween. I have found Halloween to be a good time to make fools of ourselves by dressing outrageous, over-stuff on Smarties and KitKats, and perhaps partake in a few ghost stories or treks through "haunted" neighborhood woods and houses. Until now I had thought that these ideas about Halloween were pretty much universal, at least through the Midwest, but these ideas must not be prevalent among Bowling Green children. How can I accuse such a thing? If Bowling Green children were busy putting on costumes and fully engaging themselves in Halloween activities, why would a group of boys absolutely attack my candy bowl? Well, I don't know why either, and I'm sure there's a lot of psychoanalytical BS that explains it, or maybe it was simply out of boredom, but their behavior was inappropriate nonetheless. Here's the situation: I left my heaping bowl of chocolate bars and candy on the front porch next to the pumpkin with a note wishing the trick-or-treaters "Happy Halloween" with a disclaimer at the bottom stating to "take one." Less than five minutes passed and I was about to engross myself in class readings when I heard a bunch of commotion on the porch. I figured it was just a couple of kids getting some candy, a piece or two or three. Assuming I would open the door to find cute costumes and grinning cheeks, I couldn't resist and I flung open the door only to find the bowl completely empty and strewn on the porch with the puny remains of Sweet Tarts and DumDums. I quickly walked around the wrap-around porch and saw the attackers fleeing the scene towards another abode where, luckily, the folks were present handing out their candy. Stunned by the situation, I stood on my porch shell-shocked. By the time it occurred to me that I'm older and bigger than these kids and I could make them feel guilty for their actions, they were already down the block and cutting through yards. During my shock I had noticed that these were pre-teen boys that were dressed in regular clothes donning only masks as a disguise. I know that not all BG children are this ill-mannered and there are many in fact who would have enjoyed the candy I tried to give them. As usual, though, a few rotten apples have spoiled the whole bunch. So much for the pride of handing out "the best candy on the block" to the neighborhood children. "Trick-or-treat" must be a literal term in Bowling Green. What a bummer Halloween turned out to be. There's not place like home. My home, that is.

On November 5, the BGSU community has the opportunity to vote for a candidate who cares about the issues that affect us. Chris Redfern, who is running for State Senate in the Second District, has both the public service experience and dedication that is required to represent our campus in Columbus.

Chris is a recent graduate of BGSU, and he is committed to serving the people in this region. Currently, he holds office as a commissioner in Ottawa County, where he has helped bring in over $130 million in investments and jobs. He believes education and planning creates jobs, not tax breaks for the wealthy.

One of his priorities is to make tuition affordable for all of us. He is proposing a tuition freeze on Ohio's campuses to curb the incredible cost of a college education. Currently, Ohio's tuition is the third highest in the nation. A vote for Chris would ensure a better future for all of us.

As a member of BG City Council and a student at this University, I believe Chris will be a strong voice for us in the Senate. Please join me in voting for our future on November 5 — vote for Chris Redfern.

Congressional hopefuls fight to finish

House leaders desire victory

Jim Drinkard
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republicans, led by House Speaker Newt Gingrich, closed out the election campaign Monday with a final push for their first back-to-back House majority in 66 years. "We're going to keep control of the House," Gingrich declared.

Democrats pressed their attacks on the GOP freshmen who came aboard in the Gingrich wave two years ago. But on Election Eve, dozens of races remained too close to call.

In Spokane, Wash., former House Speaker Tom Foley whipped up supporters at a rally for Judy Olson, a wheat farmer who hoped to knock off Republican George Nethercutt, who beat Foley two years ago. Nethercutt appeared far safer than a few weeks ago.

Gingrich, at a campaign event in Smyrna, Ga., contended his party could actually pad its 236-198 majority. There is one independent in the 435-member House.

A key to Republican hopes is the South, where GOP candidates appeared likely to capture districts left open by Democratic retirements in Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Texas.

Democrats, looking to win back the majority they lost two years ago, put their faith in knocking off the weakest of the GOP freshmen seeking re-election.

Senate races remain close

David Espo

WASHINGTON — From Maine to Oregon, Senate candidates stretched for the finish line Monday in a campaign of unparalleled expense and nastiness. Tight races abounded, but the GOP expressed optimism it would renew or even expand its majority.

"You work all this time and it comes down to one day," said Democratic Sen. Jay Rockefeller, seeking his third term on Tuesday. "You have to get people out to vote. You just have to do that."

Rockefeller's re-election in West Virginia seemed one of the safer bets of an election in which as many as a dozen races remained close in late public opinion polls.

"It's likely we'll gain seats in the Senate," Republican National Chairman Haley Barbour predicted. "There's a possibility of a lot of seats, of several seats changing hands, and there will be a lot of close races" in the Senate as well as the House.

Working to avoid GOP gains, President Clinton campaigned on behalf of Democratic candidates around the country, although the length of his coattails in a tightening presidential race was a matter for debate. In New Hampshire, he praised Democrat Dick Swett, challenging Sen. Bob Smith, as someone who "would be a positive, uniting force, not a divisive, rancorous force."

Much of the suspense revolved around seats with no incumbents on the ballot, including Maine,

Foreign donations questioned

Wealthy Indonesian family linked to White House controversy

Pete Yost
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An international business consultant linked to an allegation concerning a proposed $15 million political contribution from Taiwan met with President Clinton in September and came to the White House 41 times in the past 13 months.

White House spokesman Mike McCurry on Monday disclosed the meeting between Clinton, businessman Mark Middleton, deputy White House counsel Bruce Lindsey and James Riady, a member of a wealthy Indonesian family involved in the growing controversy over foreign-linked political donations.

Middleton — a former top aide to senior Clinton adviser Thomas

"Mack" McLarty — made the 41 trips to the White House from September 1995 through Sept. 30 of this year, according to Secret Service logs obtained by the House Government Reform and Oversight Committee.

McCurry said the participants "talked a little... philosophically" about the United States' posture toward Asia "and then James Riady expressed his support for what the president was doing."

Lindsey's recollection is that much of the meeting was a "social visit, a chance to catch up and say hello," the spokesman said.

Middleton visited the White House four times in September — on the 9th, 25th, 27th and 30th — and it could not immediately be determined which of his meetings was with the president.

Middleton left the administration in February 1995.

In interviews with Taiwan's two leading evening newspapers, businessman Chen Chao-ping has claimed he was present when Liu Tai-ying, the chief financial manager of Taiwan's ruling Kuomintang Party, offered to Middleton a $15 million donation to Clinton's re-election effort. Liu flatly denied the accusation.

In a statement last week, Middleton said he has been to Taiwan several times for private business. He said he never suggested he was trying to raise money for the Democrats or any candidate, never solicited contributions and never accepted or arranged any donations from any foreign source.

The revelation about Middleton's presence at the Clinton meeting came as reporters pressed the White House for details of executive mansion visits by James Riady and Democratic National Committee fund-raiser John Huang, who worked for the Riady family before going to work at the Commerce Department and then joining the DNC staff.

Clinton met with Riady and Huang and Lindsey at the White House in September 1995, McCurry said.

He said that at the meeting, Huang — then at the Commerce Department — addressed Lindsey about the possibility of Huang moving to the DNC.

According to McCurry, Lindsey said he would put Huang in touch with the proper person in order to initiate the possible change to a new job. Huang be-

Himalayan trek ends in tragedy

Tim Klass
The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Dr. Philip J. Fialkow moved with care in dangerous places, friends say, whether he was considering becoming dean of a troubled medical school or planning a trip to the Himalayas.

He exercised that caution during a mountain trek in Nepal when a freak snowstorm left him slightly frostbitten. Fialkow sent back most of his guides for a helicopter while he waited in camp with his wife, Helen, and three more men.

All these precautions could not save the Fialkows. The couple and their companions were killed in their tent under a crushing mound of snow as they slept. Rescuers were unsure exactly when they died, but they were last seen alive Oct. 21.

"The personal loss is very great for me," University of Washington President Richard McCormick said Sunday. "During my initial year as president, I relied especially heavily on Phil as a guide, an adviser and simply a supremely wise and thoughtful human being."

Fialkow, dean of the University of Washington medical school, was making his fourth trip to Nepal, an excursion friends said he had planned eagerly for a year. Fialkow's deputy, Dr. John B. Coombs, said the couple, both 62, approached their hikes with the same care a physician would take going into surgery.

"Phil and Helen's passion was travel and learning more about other cultures, and Nepal was a place of great attraction to him," Coombs said.

The Fialkows, who had two grown children, were making a simple trek through the well-traveled low mountain forests on their way to a Tibetan Buddhist monastery.

The couple set out with 12 Nepalese assistants — four sherpas, one cook, two kitchen aides and five porters. Authorities in Nepal said the group was caught by an unusual October storm that dumped up to 9 feet of snow on the trails.

Class-action suit brought against Texaco

Executive recorded racist comments which may be used against company

Jim Fitzgerald
The Associated Press

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — Every six months or so, when Texaco executives met to discuss the finance department's minority hiring practices, Richard Lundwall would slip a tiny tape recorder into his jacket.

Lundwall didn't bother telling his colleagues. He says he just wanted to make sure the minutes he kept were accurate.

But now that he has lost his job, it may turn out that what he really had in his jacket was a smoking gun.

He and other Texaco executives were caught on tape vilifying black employees as "niggers" and "black jelly beans," mocking a Kwanzaa celebration and discussing destroying documents related to a $520 million race-discrimination suit, court papers allege.

The suit is a class-action brought on behalf of 1,500 black employees of the oil company. The employees claim they were denied promotions and advancement opportunities because of their race.

Soon after a company consolidation cost Lundwall his job as senior coordinator of personnel services in Texaco's finance department, he went to the plaintiffs' attorneys with his collection of microcassettes.

The impact was immediate. In papers filed in federal court last week, the plaintiffs asked for a default judgment — that is, a ruling against Texaco without benefit of a trial. A hearing is scheduled for Nov. 22.

The tapes, as transcribed in court papers, show that in 1994, after Texaco had been asked to produce any documents relevant to the discrimination case, executives spoke frankly about papers that should be hidden or destroyed. Lundwall identified the speakers on the tapes, according to court papers.

Discussing a collection of documents on minority hiring, a man identified as Robert Ulrich, Texaco's treasurer and head of the department, says: "There is no point in even keeping the restricted version anymore. All it could do is get us in trouble."

To which Lundwall replies, "Let me shred this thing and any other restricted version like it."

A man identified as J. David Keough, senior assistant treasurer, looks at a chart of women and minorities and says: "If we can't explain this thing, I mean, it shouldn't be in there. ... If it was a favorable chart, you'd want to retain it."

Later, Ulrich says, "We're going to purge the [expletive] out of these books, though. We're not going to have any damn thing that ... we don't need to be in them."

Ulrich, now retired, said Monday, "I'm sorry, I can't talk about this." Keough did not immediately return a call to his home in Bermuda.

Texaco Chairman Peter I. Biju, addressing all employees by satellite, called the revelations "a sad day for Texaco."

If confirmed, "the rank insensitivity ... offends me deeply," he said. "I am sorry for our employees and both ashamed and outraged that such a thing happened to our family."

A call to Lundwall's attorney, Peter Gass, was not immediately returned.

Arrest ends in soldier's suicide

Clarence Roy-Macaulay
The Associated Press

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone -- A soldier killed himself while being questioned about his alleged complicity in a coup plot, the army said Monday. The soldier's father said he suspected his son was tortured.

An army spokesman said Staff Sgt. Lamin Kamara jumped from the second floor while being interrogated Oct. 30. He had been arrested earlier that day.

Kamara's relatives doubted the official account.

"If my son was not tortured unbearably, why then did it take four days for the body to be shown to me?" asked his father, Army Sgt. Maj. Alie Kamara.

"The family has demanded that a post-mortem be performed to determine the cause of death, and the military has agreed that a post-mortem will be performed tomorrow," the father said Monday.

Information minister George Banda Thomas said the death would be investigated.

Ahmed Tejan Kabbah's civilian government, which took over from a military regime in March, has been struggling to bring disgruntled soldiers into line, end a civil war, and find housing for the one-third of the nation's 4.5 million people who are without homes.

Ruthless dictator mourned

Central Africa pays tribute to Bokassa

Joseph Benamsee
The Associated Press

BANGUI, Central African Republic -- He was one of Africa's most ruthless dictators, accused of killing and eating those who dared criticize his regime. But Central Africans still mourned Jean-Bedel Bokassa, who the government said Monday would be honored with a state funeral.

Bokassa died Sunday evening of a heart attack at a clinic in Bangui. He was 75, and had been in poor health since suffering a brain hemorrhage in October 1995.

When national radio made no mention of the death, word spread quickly and several thousand mourners gathered Monday outside the main hospital where Bokassa's body lay in a morgue.

Some wept, and others sent messages of condolence despite a tyrannical rule from 1966-79 that included the massacre of 100 children after they complained about school uniforms they were required to buy from his factory.

"This man played a very important role in the life of our country. It's a sad moment for us," said Abel Goumba, an opposition leader. "But I condemn, as I have always condemned, his monarchical management."

Government spokesman Jean Willibiro-Sacko said there would be a state funeral, but arrangements were incomplete Monday.

The army lieutenant colonel seized power on Jan. 1, 1966, six years after the country won independence from France. He was ousted in a French-backed coup in 1979 after a bizarre rule that included proclaiming himself Emperor Bokassa I three years earlier.

Bokassa made a fortune during his years in power by exploiting the country's mineral resources, particularly its diamond mines, while the living standard of his 3.4 million subjects plummeted.

Bokassa embarrassed French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing by declaring he had given him diamonds. Giscard said he sold the diamonds and gave the proceeds to charity, but the affair tainted the French leader's image at home.

Long backed by France, which had key interests in the country's uranium trade, Bokassa found himself increasingly alienated by human rights abuses.

These included the 1979 slaughter of the schoolchildren in Bangui's Ngaragba prison. Reports of the massacre led to international condemnation and a cutoff of U.S. aid.

Later that year, while Bokassa was in Libya, he was ousted in a bloodless coup by French troops. They reinstated the country's first president, David Dacko, who had himself been tossed out by Bokassa.

"He treated Central Africans like they were animals, like dogs," Dacko said years later in an interview.

A 1990 documentary about Bokassa was narrated in part by the late Michael Goldsmith, an Associated Press foreign correspondent who was arrested, beaten and imprisoned for a month by Bokassa in 1977 while on assignment in Bangui.

Bokassa spent seven years in exile in Ivory Coast and France, living in luxury with 15 of his children outside Paris, where he owned four chateaus, a hotel, a villa and an executive jet.

He returned to Central African Republic in 1987 expecting to be welcomed. Instead, he became the first deposed African chief of state to be publicly tried on charges of murder, torture and cannibalism.

In the three-month trial, prosecutors claimed Bokassa's old palace was filled with evidence of atrocities, including the frozen body of a schoolteacher hanging on a freezer hook and mounds of human flesh prepared for roasting.

Bokassa's former cook testified that he prepared meals with human flesh and watched his boss eat them "with relish." Other witnesses testified Bokassa enjoyed fooling visiting foreign dignitaries by serving up his opponents as roast beef.

Serbian president retains hold in politics

Misha Savic
The Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia -- Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic and his wife, who have dominated Yugoslav politics for the past decade and helped foment war in the Balkans, have won parliamentary elections.

However, preliminary results showed Monday that the united democratic opposition did dent Milosevic's hold on local posts, with the capital, Belgrade, expected to get its first non-Communist mayor since World War II.

While the opposition complained of fraud, the U.S. Embassy in Belgrade said they "did not see widespread irregularities" except for "shortcomings of voters' lists, questionable security procedures ... and restrictions on opposition party representatives in election commissions."

With over half the ballots counted from Sunday's election for the Yugoslav parliament, the alliance uniting Milosevic's ruling Socialists with his wife Mirjana Markovic's neo-Communists had 48 percent of the vote. The four-party opposition coalition Zajedno had 24 percent, the extreme nationalist Radical Party a surprisingly strong 19 percent.

In the republic of Montenegro, Serbia's only remaining partner in Yugoslavia, the ruling former Communist party also was leading the opposition for the federal parliament's 138 seats.

Milosevic did not run himself, but he needed to retain his majority in the legislature to ensure he can hold on to power next year, when his second term as Serbian president expires.

The constitution bars him from a third term, but he can be elected Yugoslav president by the federal assembly. Once there, he can get the legislature to change the constitution to expand the powers of that now-symbolic post.

His coalition may fall short of the two-thirds majority needed for such changes. But Milosevic spokesman Ivica Dacic was upbeat, forecasting an "absolutely absolute majority."

On Sunday, Montenegrins also voted for their 71-seat parliament, where the ruling former Communists had a comfortable lead. Ballots also were cast for municipal districts throughout Serbia and the smaller Montenegro.

In those contests, the democratic coalition fared better than Milosevic's Socialists and his wife's Marxist party, apparently because the two parties ran separately.

Zoran Djindjic, a prominent opposition politician, nearly won outright as mayor of Belgrade. He faces a runoff election Nov. 17.

The local levels are not crucial, but give the opposition a political foothold it has lacked since Milosevic rose through the Communist ranks to take control of Serbia in 1987.

The opposition also said many voters in the central Serbian town of Nis, a Milosevic stronghold, had switched allegiance. Nis recently has seen unprecedented worker unrest over unpaid or tiny state wages and pensions, 50 percent unemployment and 100 percent inflation.

Milosevic profited from Balkan inclination to support the ruling leader and from aggressive attacks on the opposition in his state-run media.

Opposition leaders complained of irregularities that they said swung the election -- the same charges they leveled in the 1990 and 1992 elections.

Milosevic and the authorities reject such charges.

Europe ousts Communist leaders

Mark J. Porubcansky
The Associated Press

SOFIA, Bulgaria — People in the poorest corner of Europe, where communism was too entrenched to die easily, had a chance this weekend to say yes or no to the Communists' successors. Where they had a real choice, they threw 'em out.

Elections Sunday in Romania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, where some 40 million people reside, reinforced two points about politics in the post-Communist era:

■ People here, like elsewhere, vote their pocketbooks. In Romania and Bulgaria, voters said plainly that their pocketbooks are empty and they're fed up.

■ Disregard point No. 1 if the rulers dominate the media during campaigns, like Russia's Boris Yeltsin did this summer, or strong-arm voters, as did Albanian President Sali Berisha. On Sunday, Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic proved he was equally adept at using his advantage.

The wind of change that swept through the musty corridors of communist power in eastern and central Europe seven years ago this month ended as a feeble breeze in Romania and Bulgaria.

Romania executed Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu, but replaced him with Ion Iliescu, a former Communist minister who preferred a go-slow approach to painful market reforms. The Communists' successors in Bulgaria have controlled six out of seven governments since 1989.

Voters in the two poor Balkan countries were most concerned about hanging onto the relatively little they had — until Sunday.

In Romania, they rejected Iliescu's Social Democracy Party, and served notice on the 66-year-old president he will have to fight for his political life in a Nov. 17 runoff with university professor Emil Constantinescu.

The only race in Bulgaria was for the largely ceremonial presidency. But with the country's economy plunging, it became a referendum on Premier Zhan Videnov's Socialists.

Governments in both countries allowed a few people, including officials and their friends, to get very rich in the transition. Neither could ensure that vast numbers of people wouldn't suffer with falling living standards.

In Sofia, criminal bands use bullets and bombs to fight for turf. Meanwhile, the country can't even guarantee enough food for the winter.

Both President-elect Petar Stoyanov and his defeated Socialist rival, Ivan Marazov, said securing winter supplies would be a top priority. On Monday, Deputy Premier Rumen Gechev went to Brussels to meet European Union officials and discuss ways of ensuring that Bulgaria had enough grain for the winter.

"The vote reflects the total political and economic stagnation in Romania."

Emil Hurezeanu
Romanian poet

There already were sporadic bread shortages over the summer. Asked about the coming season as she was minding a display of needlework on a street in Plovdiv, Bulgaria's second-largest city, retiree Dzena Koseva said the winter "could hardly be any worse" than conditions now.

Emil Hurezeanu, a Romanian journalist, writer and poet, said the vote "reflects the total political and economic stagnation in Romania."

The mood seems at odds with countries farther north. Former Communists now run Poland and Hungary, where voters who kicked the Communists out a few years back have opted for experienced government.

The Czechs' conservative prime minister, Vaclav Klaus, barely has managed to buck the trend. While former Communists hardly register in Czech politics, Social Democrats made a strong showing in elections this summer because Klaus' reforms have made a few people wealthy while many others struggle. Klaus now presides over a minority government.

Milosevic is another politician who bucks trends, in a different way. When Communists were being thrown out all over the region, he transformed himself into a nationalist and helped instigate wars in Croatia and Bosnia.

On Sunday, he teamed up with his wife Mirjana Markovic, an unrepentant Communist, to win parliamentary elections.

Following the disastrous wars that led to international sanctions, Milosevic appeared to be a prime target for an angry populace voting its empty pocketbook.

But that's where rule No. 2 comes in. Milosevic always has controlled Serbian TV, the main source of news for most Yugoslavs, and he has extended his grip to most newspapers.

As in previous elections, he used it to influence the vote — and there was little his opponents could do.

better off than we were four years ago," Clinton said before leaving Ohio for Kentucky, Iowa, South Dakota and, ultimately, an Election Day homecoming in Arkansas.

He noted Dole's Senate opposition to the family leave law and said his Republican opponent wanted to abolish the Education Department and enact a "risky scheme" to cut taxes that Clinton said would imperil Medicare.

"Seize the day to keep your country moving in the right direction," Clinton said in urging supporters to get to the polls Tuesday. "I have done all I can do. It is in your corner now."

Dole, at 73, likely was asking for votes for the last time, too, win or lose, closing out a political career that included 35 years in Congress, and a record 12 years as the Senate Republican leader.

"I need your votes," Dole told a crowd in New Mexico as he raced through four time zones and six states in a final push that was ending at noon Tuesday back home in Russell, Kan. "There's still time," he said.

Even many of Dole's most loyal campaign aides weren't sure of that. A dozen states were considered tossups in the presidential race. But even if he won all of them, Dole would need to upset Clinton in California or in several Midwest states to win.

Louisiana went Clinton's way four years ago, and Dole made an election-eve pitch for a change of direction. "If anybody here voted for Bill Clinton, this is a chance to redeem yourself," Dole said. "I believe in redemption."

The race tightened somewhat in the final days as Dole raised questions about Clinton's role in questionable Democratic Party fund-raising from foreign interests. So he hammered that theme to the end.

"I will not compromise ethics or violate the public trust," Dole said, keeping his remarks to a few minutes at each stop because of a failing voice. "If you want a full-time president who won't be going to hearings or trials or anything else, Bob Dole is your choice."

Perot was running a distant third everywhere, and appeared unlikely to match the 19 percent of the vote he received in 1992. His message echoed Dole's but didn't necessarily help the GOP challenger, who can't afford to lose anti-Clinton votes to Perot.

"Our president, his wife and a number of associates face serious criminal charges," Perot told a Texas audience. "Would you allow a person with pending criminal charges to babysit your children?"

It was unclear whether Perot was referring to the recent reports of questionable fund-raising or the Whitewater investigation into business and political dealings when Clinton was Arkansas governor. But there are no pending criminal charges against either the president or his wife.

While the refrains from the White House hopefuls were familiar, election eve brought a sense of urgency to the delivery. It was much the same in hard-fought congressional contests.

Former President Jimmy Carter was on hand to help Gantt drum up turnout — the goal of candidates everywhere at the end.

BG volleyball's Crumley has played through pain

William Sanderson
The BG News

The worst fear of any athlete is an injury. Injury that may not only jeopardize their future in their sport, but effect their health after their playing days. For Bowling Green volleyball's outside hitter Shayne Crumley, these fears have been overcome.

Two summers ago, Crumley injured one of her already sensitive knees at a summer volleyball camp. Crumley played through the pain during the 1995 season. She had surgery in January, and missed most of spring practice.

Crumley has endured the pain this season to appear in all of Bowling Green's matches. Going into the final three matches of the season, Crumley has 288 digs in her defensive role, as well as contributing to the offense with 162 kills and 48 total blocks.

"It [the knee injury] has definitely hampered my career," said Crumley. "It's very frustrating, getting to the end of the season, you want to be in the prime of your career and injuries make it so you can't jump high enough or move fast enough. Of course it's going to be frustrating. You have to stay positive and deal with it."

"Shayne has been an extremely hard worker and competitor," coach Denise Van De Walle said. "I feel badly for her that she has had to play with knee injuries her whole career. Right now she's playing through pain."

Crumley, a senior co-captain, played her final two matches at Anderson Arena over the weekend. With only three matches left, Crumley will bring a solid collegiate career to a close.

"It seems like the whole career has flown by," Crumley said. "I can't believe it. People said it would go fast, but I didn't realize it would go that fast."

"I've enjoyed it all and I'm thankful that I've had the opportunity to play for four years here. I think my body is ready. I'll miss the competitiveness of Division I volleyball."

"Shayne has been an extremely hard worker and competitor."

Denise Van De Walle
BG volleyball coach

Through her time with the Falcons, Crumley has played a mostly defensive role. She currently has 730 career digs, with only 127 reception errors. Offensively, her kills totals have improved every year. This year she is already 37 over last year's total.

That gives her career totals of 426 kills, 730 digs and 116 total blocks going into the final three matches.

It has been a rebuilding year for the Falcons. As a team co-captain, the team's lack of success has weighed heavily on her.

"Well, since we're so used to a winning tradition, not being one of the top four teams is a frustrating and very different feeling," Crumley said. "It's also very frustrating because we have so many new people, for them not to be able to experience what we've experienced in the past. Coming new into the program is a little frustrating. We want to see them succeed also."

Although this season has been difficult, Crumley sees a light at the end of the tunnel. Even before the Falcons' victories against Central and Eastern Michigan last weekend, Crumley projected a turnaround.

"Their experience from this year will carry over to next year," Crumley said. "They will continue the winning tradition next year."

The memories she will take away from BG will largely involve her teammates and the trips they have made together rather than any match or achievement, she said.

"I'll definitely remember the friendships I've made. That's one of the biggest things. These girls are special to me," Crumley said. "The coach [Van De Walle] is a very special person. It's the relationships that I'll remember." Crumley came to BG from Forest Hills Central High School in Ada, Mich. There, she starred in basketball as well as volleyball with the Rangers. Crumley was a third team all-state player in her senior year, as well as an all-conference, all-area and all-region selection. She also helped the Rangers to a league and district title in her junior year.

She has made Dean's List, and is a two-time MAC Commissioner's Award recipient.

In a time where the student portion of student-athlete sometimes gets overlooked, Crumley has been an exception. An education major, Crumley has 3.72 GPA entering the fall semester.

Falcons sliding into season abyss

Falcon football coach Gary Blackney was philosophical when speaking about the team Monday during his weekly press conference. The Falcons are fresh off two losses against programs - Ohio and Akron - which they have owned over the past several years.

Bowling Green stands 4-5 on the season and 3-4 in the Mid-American Conference following Saturday's 21-14 loss to Akron. BG takes on Western Michigan this Saturday at 1 p.m. in the home finale before closing out the season at Central Florida next week.

Blackney talked about the past two seasons as a whole and the trials that this team has gone through. After a ho-hum 5-6 record last year, the Falcons are spiraling towards the same type of mediocre finish in 1996.

FOOTBALL NOTEBOOK

The coach talked again about a near-forbidden subject in the BG's athletic department: the famed season finale in 1994 when the Falcons were upset by Central Michigan and had a bid in the '94 Las Vegas Bowl whisked away.

Blackney indicated Monday that the game may have whisked away even more than that.

"Up until that last game against Central Michigan, we just knew that we weren't going to lose," Blackney said. "That Central Michigan game, no matter what anybody says, changed the whole psyche of our football team."

"Somehow, we have to get back to that mindset where whatever happens in the game, we aren't going to lose. Our kids aren't playing like that right now."

Since that loss to Central Michigan, BG has a 9-11 record. Previous to that game, the Falcons were 27-7-2 since 1991 under Blackney.

"Up until that last game against Central Michigan, we just knew that we weren't going to lose."

Gary Blackney
BG football coach

"We need to learn how to finish," Blackney said. "We haven't closed the transaction since Toledo. I think that comes from confidence ... confidence in yourself, confidence in the defense, confidence in the offense ...

"Go back to '91 and '92, it didn't matter as long as [former quarterback] Eric White had the football and we were within a score. That's confidence. The same thing happened in '94."

Niemet will practice today

The return of quarterback Bob Niemet could foster some of that confidence that Blackney spoke of. Niemet, out since the Ball State game Oct. 19 with a dislocated shoulder, threw the ball in drills late last week and is expected to practice with the team today.

"He's anxious, he's excited," Blackney said. "With all due respect to [current quarterback] Mark Molk, I'm excited too."

Niemet is at least a full week ahead of schedule than what the Falcons had originally planned. BG had been planning on having Molk at quarterback the rest of the season.

Even the return of Niemet wouldn't completely solve the myriad of problems plaguing the offense.

Blackney said that he hopes to have a decision as to who will start at quarterback against Western Michigan by Wednesday evening.

Bengals respond to Coslet

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI – Whether it's the coach or merely coincidence, the Cincinnati Bengals have played their two grittiest games of the season under Bruce Coslet. The Bengals remained unbeaten under Coslet by rallying from an 18-point deficit to beat the Baltimore Ravens 24-21 Sunday. Cincinnati trailed 21-3 at halftime, when Coslet lit into his players.

The tough talk produced the Bengals' biggest come-from-behind victory on the road in franchise history.

"Bruce challenged our manhood at halftime," offensive tackle Joe Walter said. "He said, 'Are you men or are you boys?'"

Coslet did something similar at halftime of his coaching debut Oct. 27 and watched the Bengals score 21 points in the fourth quarter for a 28-21 victory over Jacksonville.

The Bengals are only 3-6 overall but 2-0 under Coslet, who has taken a much sterner approach than Dave Shula and gotten results.

"If some of their deficiencies need to be pointed out to them in front of everybody else, then I'll do that," Coslet said Monday. "That's really all we did in the locker room, and they responded."

"Each guy responds differently when you're in a group situation like that. That turns some people off and that turns some people on. By and large, it turned most of them on and they got it done. We played a lot better. It looked like night and day, really."

Shula, who went 19-52 in four-plus seasons, also got at least one good result with a tough halftime talk. He tore into his players at halftime of their final game last season, and they matched the franchise record by overcoming a 21-point deficit for a 27-24 victory over Minnesota at Riverfront Stadium.

"We really think we have a chance to win no matter what."

Dan Wilkinson
Bengals' defensive tackle

However, Shula was more even-tempered and less prone to criticize his players. Coslet does not shy away from saying what's on his mind.

"I've just kind of tried to be myself," Coslet said. "If I see something that needs to be fixed, I'll mention it. I'll pull a guy aside quietly or yell at him in front of the team. It depends on how I think it's best to handle it."

So far, the Bengals have taken to his approach. Instead of playing teams close and then folding at the end, as they did under Shula, they're playing their best in the second half under Coslet.

Bengals quarterback Jeff Blake (8) eludes Baltimore's Donny Brady (24) in Cincinnati's 24-21 win over the Ravens. The win marks the Bengals' second consecutive win under Coslet.

"Our attitude has been adjusted," defensive tackle Dan Wilkinson said. "We really think we have a chance no matter what."

While the two second-half comebacks have brought the team together, the two poor first halves have concerned Coslet. The Bengals were able to rally

Brumfield on recovery track

The Associated Press

BALTIMORE – Scott Brumfield is regaining strength and motion in his legs, and the Cincinnati Bengals lineman could return home this week.

However, his doctor said Monday it is too early to tell if the 26-year-old guard would ever play football again.

"We're guardedly optimistic about his prognosis," said Andrew Pollak, an orthopedic trauma surgeon at the University of Maryland's Shock Trauma Center.

Brumfield sustained a concussion of the spinal cord in his neck when he collided with teammate Tony McGee during Sunday's game against the Baltimore Ravens.

X-rays and magnetic resonance imaging scans did not show damage to the bones or ligaments in the spine.

Pollak said Brumfield, who was listed in fair but stable condition, was being treated with drugs and his condition was improving.

Brumfield's wife, Jodi, and mother, Carol Brumfield, were at his bedside Monday. Both flew to Baltimore after the injury. Jodi Brumfield was watching the game at home in Cincinnati when her husband was injured.

Carol Brumfield said her son was in good spirits Monday.

"You want to encourage them with their lifelong dreams but you always worry about something like this happening," she said. "But you have to support them."

Brumfield was able to move his arms and was slowly regaining strength and movement in his hands and legs. When he was brought in Sunday, he was able only to wiggle his toes and was experiencing weakness in his hands.

"Every couple of hours we go back and examine him and he's better than before," Pollak said.

Pollak, a team physician for the Ravens, said it was difficult to say how quickly Brumfield would progress, but it was possible he could return to Cincinnati in 24 to 48 hours. He did not know if he would be treated in a hospital or on an outpatient basis.

Bengals trainer Paul Sparling said Monday the lineman was tentatively scheduled to return to Cincinnati on Wednesday.

Brumfield was carried from the field on a stretcher during the third quarter.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Kemerer named MAC player of the week

Freshman volleyball player Lori Kemerer has been named the Mid-American Conference Player of the Week. Kemerer's contributions were key in BG's wins over Central and Eastern Michigan.

Kemerer is a middle/right-side hitter from Antwerp, Ohio. Kemerer posted a combined hitting percentage of .397 in the Falcons' wins over Central Michigan (15-4, 15-6, 15-12) and Eastern Michigan (15-5, 15-5, 14-16, 15-13) last weekend. In the win over CMU on Friday, Kemerer hit .364 (10 kills, 2 errors, 22 total attempts) while recording 13 digs and five blocks. She hit .417 (18-36) with 13 digs and four blocks in the victory over EMU Saturday.

On the weekend, Kemerer posted a total of 28 kills, averaging 4.00 kills per game. She also averaged 3.71 digs and 1.29 blocks per game.

Are Steelers best in AFC?

Alan Robinson
The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH -- The Buffalo Bills once were all the rage, and the Kansas City Chiefs later became the trendy pick to win the AFC.

The Denver Broncos' bandwagon picks up more momentum with every John Elway fourth-quarter comeback.

Yet the Pittsburgh Steelers find themselves wondering, with apologies to the Pirates for stealing their short-lived rallying cry of last summer: Why Not Us?

The Steelers' 7-2 start matches the franchise's best since they last won the Super Bowl in the 1979 season. They've won seven of their last eight. They are 30-11 in the regular season since 1994, with seven games left.

Jerome Bettis is threatening to win the NFL rushing title, and the defense, even without Greg Lloyd, might be an improved version of Blitzburgh. The offensive line is unrivaled outside of the Dallas city limits.

So why, the Steelers found themselves wondering after dismantling the St. Louis Rams 42-6 Sunday, do so many around the NFL seem to summarily dismiss their chances of repeating as AFC champions?

"Our best game is still ahead of us," said Brentson Buckner, who had one of Pittsburgh's six sacks of St. Louis rookie Tony Banks. "We were close [Sunday], but we're not there yet. And I know I want to be here when this team plays its best game."

The Steelers' fifth consecutive home victory this season – they are 9-0 at Three Rivers since October 1995 – opened a two-game lead over Houston (5-4) in the AFC Central. The Oilers have lost two straight since beating Pittsburgh 23-13 in the Astrodome on Oct. 20.

Pittsburgh also has a favorable schedule as its nears its fifth consecutive playoff appearance under coach Bill Cowher, who has reached the 50-win mark faster than all but seven coaches in NFL history.

The Steelers play Cincinnati (3-6) and Jacksonville (3-6) the next two weeks, followed by Miami (4-5) and Baltimore (3-6). They don't play a winning-record team again until consecutive home games in December against San Diego (5-4) and San Francisco (7-2).

"It's special what we've got going on around here," said Bettis, who needs 47 yards to become only the Steelers' second 1,000-yard rusher since Franco Harris. "Winning has created an aura around here."

Especially in January, when the icy winds blow off the Three Rivers and the Steelers' well-fueled fans give Pittsburgh a true home-field advantage in the playoffs.

"B-r-r-r," Bettis said. "I don't know too many teams that want to come in here in January. I know I wouldn't."

But, as Cowher cautioned, the Steelers will never get the recognition they seek or the respect they seemingly require until they win the Super Bowl.

They have won at least 11 games all but once in seasons since Cowher took over in 1992, but they have yet to win even one Super Bowl to go with the four achieved under coach Chuck Noll from 1974-79.

"The common denominator is championships, and if I'm going to be put into that mold, I guess there's something else I've got to do – and that we have to do as a team," Cowher said.

Jeter wins AL Rookie of the Year

New York Yankees' Derek Jeter takes a cut against the Baltimore Orioles in the ninth inning at Camden Yards. Jeter was unanimously voted the AL Rookie of the Year.

Manley released from pen on good behavior

The Associated Press

HUNTSVILLE, Texas — Dexter Manley walked out of prison Monday and hopped into a black Mercedes, freed on parole after serving nearly 15 months of a four-year term for cocaine possession.

"I'm OK," the former Washington Redskins star said after heading down a stairway outside the Walls Unit of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice and hugging his girlfriend. "It's been a soul searching. The only thing I can say is don't judge me by what I say, judge me by my actions."

Manley won parole for good behavior. He had pleaded guilty to two counts of cocaine possession after repeated suspensions from football and arrests for illegal drug use. His last arrest, in 1995 in his native Houston, got him tossed behind bars.

Manley emerged from the prison with 105 other freed inmates and was dressed in a light-blue, short-sleeve shirt and gray pants. He had expressed fears earlier about what the prison system, which issues clothing to released inmates, might give him.

His attorney, Paula Asher, along with his girlfriend, brought him a change of clothes, including a garment in a Neiman Marcus bag, and he quickly slipped into a nearby building. He came out a few minutes later wearing a white shirt, red sleeveless sweater and jeans. Then they all got into a Mercedes and headed for Houston, about 90 miles to the south.

Among conditions of his parole is substance abuse treatment, frequent contact with his parole officer, urinalysis to detect drug use, a ban on alcohol and attendance at support group meetings.

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Derek Jeter, who began the season as the second-most publicized shortstop in New York and blossomed into one of baseball's best young players, unanimously won the AL Rookie of the Year award Monday.

Jeter batted .314 with 10 home runs and 78 RBIs, then helped the Yankees win the World Series just four months after his 22nd birthday.

Jeter was the eighth Yankees player to win the award — including shortstops Tony Kubek and Tom Tresh — and first since Dave Righetti in 1981. He received all 28 first-place votes and 140 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Chicago White Sox pitcher James Baldwin, who went 11-6, got 19 second-place votes and 64 points. Detroit first baseman Tony Clark, who hit 27 home runs, was third with six second-place votes and 64 points.

Jeter was the fifth unanimous choice for the award and the first since California outfielder Tim Salmon in 1993.

Voting was completed at the end of the regular season. That was before Jeter hit that startling home run caught by a 12-year-old boy in the AL playoffs and before his RBI single against Greg Maddux keyed New York's win over Atlanta in the clinching Game 6 of the Series.

Jeter, the sixth player picked in the 1992 draft, briefly appeared for the Yankees in 1995. He earned the starting job this spring, although fancy-fielding Mets shortstop Rey Ordonez attracted more attention than Jeter at the start of the year.

But Jeter helped steady a position that had been in flux for the Yankees for several seasons. He became their sixth different opening-day shortstop in six years — following Tony Fernandez, Mike Gallego, Spike Owen, Randy Velarde and Alvaro Espinoza — and quickly established himself.

On opening day in Cleveland, in just his 16th major league game, he showed off his many talents. He hit a home run off Dennis Martinez and also made a running, over-the-shoulder catch in the outfield, a play that became his trademark in the field.

By the end of the season, he had played 157 games, the most by a Yankees shortstop since Bucky Dent in 1977. He also became the first No. 1 pick of the Yankees to make an impact with the team since Thurman Munson.
